Revised October 2006

About Housing Options for Seniors in Halton

There are many options to consider when you are thinking about housing to suit your needs, as you grow older. This document outlines many of them.

Before you make a decision, you should seek out as much information as you can about the options that interest you.

When looking for more information, one might also consider:

- Are pets allowed?
- Are there accessible units available?
- Will it meet future needs? (physical, financial and social)
- What are the costs and the likelihood of increases?
- What services are available? What is optional and what may have additional cost?
- Can friends and family visit easily? (e.g. public transportation and accessibility to building)
- Can I access my family doctor or is there a doctor available on site or on call?

Stay in your own Home

The Elder Services Advisory Committee (ESAC) recognizes that staying in your own home is a popular option and has included some ideas to assist those who choose to remain in their homes.

Considerations

To remain in your own home, one must consider:

- Personal finances
- Health
- Family and other supports
- The environment's ability to meet physical needs

Included in this brochure are ideas to assist you with this. They include:

- Personal supports
- Financial supports
- Ideas to modify the home to better meet physical needs

Personal Supports

There are a variety of private and government assisted programs that can help to support individuals who need assistance.

For an extensive list of community supports, refer to Halton Seniors Directory.

or go to Halton Region's

Some examples of available programs are:

Community Care Access Centre of Halton (CCAC) provides information and access to services in the home, community and other residential settings.

For further information and eligibility call:

905-639-5228

or toll free 1-800-810-0000

ConnectCARE can provide immediate access to help in the home at the press of a portable button and home speaker unit, in the event of a fall or other unexpected emergency

Meals on Wheels can provide nutritious, inexpensive meals delivered by volunteers.

Adult Day Programs can provide care and socialization in a group setting.

TeleTouch can provide a regular phone call to seniors living alone for assurance and socializing.

Community Programs can provide transportation, diner clubs, friendly visiting, foot care, telephone reassurance etc.

Also consider hiring private services to supplement community services. Employing a live-in housekeeper or hiring a private duty nurse may help to maintain independence and lengthen the time you can spend in your own home.

Financial Support

For seniors who elect to remain in their own homes but are concerned about costs, the following may provide some assistance in enhancing cash flow.

Property Tax Deferral Program

This program, offered by local municipalities, allows a senior receiving a government income supplement to defer property tax payments until the house is sold at which time the taxes plus interest are due. This increases current cash flow and therefore is an advantage to seniors who have higher property taxes and less income. Interest rates will be a consideration in this option.

Stay in your own Home

Home Sharing/Renting

Home sharing can provide extra income. Renting a portion of your home can also provide additional income and the possibility of companionship and assistance with chores and maintenance.

Reverse Mortgage

A reverse mortgage is a plan that allows seniors to convert some or all of the home equity into cash while retaining occupancy of the home.

Under this plan, the senior homeowner would take out a loan on security of the home and use the proceeds to meet cash needs and improve their standard of living. The loan amount and interest must be repaid when the term expires, the owner dies or the home is sold.

Modify your Home to Meet Current /Future Needs

Adapting your own home to meet your needs can help maintain independence. Adding grab bars in the washroom, changing shower or bathtub, installing hand railings, modifying kitchen cupboards or relocating a bedroom to the main floor are all options to consider.

For information on financial assistance, refer to Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the Resources section on page 36.

Also in this section is contact information for Is Your Home Suitable for You Now and in the Future? This document assists in identifying areas that need improvements and contains information about financial assistance available for renovations.

Life Lease Housing

What is it?

Life Lease housing is usually owned and managed by non-profit community based groups. It differs from renting since the residents obtain the right to occupy the unit by purchasing a lease for a period of time for an upfront payment plus a monthly maintenance fee. In most cases, when the resident moves out, the lease is sold back to the owner for fair market value less a fee. The owner then “resells” the lease to another older adult.

More Options to Consider

Garden Suite

A garden suite is a pre-fabricated structure installed on a temporary basis in the backyard of an existing home owned by a senior's family member.

It allows an individual to live independently and remain close to family for mutual assistance.

Check with your local municipality for building and zoning requirements.

See Resources section on page 36 for information on fabricated structures and financial assistance.

Home Sharing

This is a living arrangement where unrelated people live in a single dwelling. This option can provide financial benefits, assistance with chores, as well as companionship and security.

When an older adult lives alone in a large home and has difficulty with chores, renting to a physically stronger person can help the older adult to stay in their home for a longer period of time. If help around the house is exchanged for lower rent, this arrangement can be beneficial for both parties.

Co-Housing

This is a relatively new option where a group of people get together to plan and develop their housing community.

Residents own their own housing unit but often share spaces such as dining and recreational facilities.

In this option, seniors maintain independent spaces and choose to live with friends and share interests and workloads. The planning stage also allows participants to express opinions regarding the design of the home.

See Resources section on page 36 for information on the Canadian Cohousing Network.
